

'MITHILĀ AND NEPAL

By

Prof. Luciano Petech

The reign of Harisimha, the last Karṇāṭa ruler of Mithilā, has attracted for a long time the attention of scholars, and chiefly Prof. R.K. Choudhary was quite active in this field. To his unflagging zeal we owe the discovery of some new material and repeated critical appraisals of all the available evidence. I myself contributed some data a few years ago;¹ but at that time it was for me a mere sideline. Prof. Choudhary's latest articles² have prompted me to take up that line of research again. If I felt compelled to disagree with him on several points, let me assure my learned colleague that none more than I is aware of the great importance of his contribution to the history of Mithilā.

On the whole, we agree on the reconstruction of the Karṇāṭa genealogy after Nānyadeva. But we differ rather widely on the chronological set-up, partly because Prof. Choudhary has built his system on a misunderstanding of the data I had made available in 1958.

In Prof. Choudhary's opinion,³ Rāmasimha of Mithilā reigned between 1227-1283; I had suggested an approximate date of C. 1205-1245,⁴ giving my reasons, which I am not going to repeat here. Both of Prof. Choudhary's dates are due to misunderstandings. For the date of 1227 he quotes the authority of the Tibetan traveller C'os-rje-dpal, according to whom Rāmasimha of Tirhut would have ascended the throne seven years before C'os-rje-dpal's passage through Tirhut. I am unable to find this statement in the text of C'os-rje-dpal as published and translated by the late G. Roerich;⁵ the biography says nothing of the sort and the date of 1227 rests on no authority.

The date of 1283, according to Prof. Choudhary, is that of the

-
1. Mediaeval History of Nepal, Rome 1958.
 2. Harisimhadeva of Mithilā, in ABORI 42 (1961), pp. 123-140 (issued in 1963 only), The later Karnatas of Mithilā and Nepal, in JBRs 46 (1960), pp. 16-26 (issued in 1964 only).
 3. Harisimhadeva of Mithilā, p. 127.
 4. Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 193.
 5. G. Roerich, Biography of Dharmasvāmin, Patna 1959. It is a pity that the text is so full of misprints and the translation is none too reliable; see J. W. De Jong, in Indo-Iranian Journal 6 (1962), pp. 167-173.

accession of Harisimha as given in the Kaisher vamśāvalī.⁶ This assertion is based on the final portion of the fragmentary manuscript of the Kaisher vamśāvalī, as published in Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 217. The actual text is as follows : tatsunu [Ha] rasimha deva nripatih Kārṇāṭa-cūdāmaṇiḥ || bāṇābdhiyu [gmaśa] śt 1205 (sic) samvat Śakavarṣe pauṣasya sukla navamī ra [visunuvare.....]; here the manuscript is broken off. This is simply the usual chronogram about Harisimha's entry in the hills after leaving Tirhut, a chronogram current in Mithilā and preserved in many sources. Bāṇābdhiyugmaśaśi corresponds of course to 1245 Śaka, and the number 1205 is just a mistaken equivalence given by the author of the vamśāvalī, or more likely inserted by some ignorant scribe.⁷ So there is no date for Rāmasimha in the Kaisher vamśāvalī, much less in the Tucci vamśāvalī or anywhere else in the Nepalese sources. I think that the available evidence supports my dates better than those suggested by Prof. Choudhary.

Virasimha, whom a colophon mentions as reigning in Tirhut in C. 1260 A.D.,⁸ is believed by Prof. Choudhary to be ruling in some other part of Tirhut and possibly to belong to the line of Malladeva. I am not competent to discuss the latter suggestion, but I definitely cannot accept the first one. According to the colophon, Virasimha reigned at Śālmali-Pāṭaka. This is clearly identical with Pāṭaka which was the capital of the second Kārṇāṭa king Gaṅgadeva or Gāṅgeyadeva (C. 1145-1175) according to a colophon;⁹ with Pa-ta which was the capital of Ramasimha (C. 1205-1245) according to C'os-rje-dpal;¹⁰ with.....dha-Pāṭaka of the inscription of king Narasimhadeva of 1453;¹¹ and perhaps even with Patanapuri which was the capital of Harisimha (C. 1279-1324). This Pāṭaka may or may not be identical with Simraongarh; that is a point which must be left for Mithilā scholars to decide. What is relevant here is the fact that Virasimha did not reign in some outlying portion of Tirhut, but in the same capital as all the great kings of the Kārṇāṭa dynasty.

Without giving the matter more attention than it deserves, I shall remark in passing that Prof. Choudhary misunderstands me on two points

6. Incidentally, in the following lines Prof. Choudhary attributes that date to the Tucci Sanskrit vamśāvalī, which, however, gives no date at all.
7. This was already pointed out in Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 8, a passage which must have escaped Prof. Choudhary.
8. Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 195.
9. Literature listed in Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 192.
10. G. Roerich, Biography of Dharmasvāmin, pp. 58-59, 100-101.
11. K. P. Jayaswal, Kandahā inscription of king Narasimhadeva, in JBORS 20 (1944), pp. 15-19; for the correct date (S. 1375) see Upendra Thakur, History of Mithilā, Darbhanga 1956, pp. 326-327.

of minor importance. Firstly, Ripumalla and Saṅgrāmamalla have nothing to do with the Mallas of Nepal;¹² they were kings of the Khasiyā state in Western Nepal, which included also the greater part of Western Tibet.¹³ Secondly, I never gave out as a fact¹⁴ that Jagatsimha was a son of Harisimha. That was a guess from my part, which fits very well with the known facts, but must await confirmation. It is a working hypothesis and nothing else, and it is certainly unsafe to construct genealogies on it.

The most important point on which I completely differ with the opinions of Professors Choudhary and R. C. Majumdar is the role played by Harisimha in Nepal. My learned colleagues still give full credit to the Pratāpa Malla inscription of the 17th century and to the Wright Vaṃśāvalī of the early 19th century, which make Harisimha the ancestor of the later Malla kings. In their opinion Nānyadeva established his suzerainty over Nepal, and Harisimha renewed it and ruled there after his retreat from Tirhut; and the kings of the colophons, thererore, were vassal rulers under Karṇāṭa suzerainty.

May I be allowed to recall a fundamental principle of historical criticism, which is taken for granted all over the world: earlier sources deserve better credence than later sources. To put it more precisely: if the earlier sources unanimously agree in establishing a fact, their evidence is to be preferred to whatever later sources have to say. This basic principle has been violated in this instance.

The contemporary sources for Nepalese history of the 14th century are the fairly numerous colophons, several inscriptions, the Gopāl (or Bendall) vaṃśāvalī, and the Kaisher vaṃśāvalī; both these chronicles belong to the end of that same 14th century. Their unanimous evidence shows that a lineage of kings ruled in Nepal, whom we call Malla because of their name endings. Of these kings we have dates and partly also the genealogy. They bore the full royal style Mahārājādhirāja paramēśvara paramabhaṭṭāraka, which excludes a foreign suzerainty. The Pratāpa Malla inscription, which is later by three centuries, and the still more modern Wright vaṃśāvalī have no weight against the evidence of two ancient chronicles and of several scores of colophons and inscriptions. I pointed out long ago the reason why the later sources fabricated a royal genealogy, which is without authority and palpably false; the Mallas

12. As is implied in Harisimhadeva of Mithilā, p. 132.

13. G. Tucci, Preliminary report on two scientific expeditions in Nepal, Rome 1946, pp. 43-130.

14. As taken for granted in Harisimhadeva of Mithilā, p. 134, and Later Karnātas, p. 19.

of Kathmandu in the 17th century claimed to be descended through Jayasthitimalla from Harisimha, and accordingly adjusted their genealogy (and incidentally the whole history of Nepal).

If we base ourselves on the contemporary sources, as we are bound to do in correct historical method, the picture is as follows. Harisimha and his minister Canḍeśvara invaded Nepal in 1289 or 1291 and again in 1311 ; the latter came once more in 1314 and raided the valley as far as the shrine of Paśupati, without conquering it permanently. When Harisimha was expelled by the Muslims from Tirhut, he fled towards Nepal; this happened in 1323 according to the Mithilā chronogram (which date cannot be correct) or at the beginning of 1325 according to the Muslim sources. There is no probability, and not a shred of contemporary evidence, in favour of a conquest of the valley by him after his flight from Tirhut,

When we are told that "the mysterious connection of the Karnāṭas and the Mallas remains to be explored further till we get some definite evidence to reject the Karnāṭa authority in Nepal altogether",¹⁵ I am afraid this is tackling the matter at the wrong end. When the contemporary colophons and inscriptions consistently ignore the existence of such an authority, the onus of the proof lies with the supporters of that contention.

Harisimha's end was quite in keeping with the picture of a helpless fugitive, which I believe him to have been. It is described in a few lines by the Gopāla (or Bendall) vamsāvalī. In 1958 I misunderstood that passage, and I am sorry if any scholar was misled thereby; to my excuse I can only say that the old Newari of that venerable chronicle is still very difficult to penetrate, even to modern Newars. What follows is a faithful transcription of the relevant passage in the original manuscript in the Bir Library at Kathmandu (f. 46a—b) :¹⁶

स ४४६ माघ शुदि ३ तिरहुतिः हरशिह राजासन मिहोसन तसत्र गद्दी दो
ढीलीस तुरक याके वंङ्क रायत मानालपं थमु अगु गन याङ्क वस्यं शिमरावन गड्ड मङ्ग
याङ्क तिरहुतिया राजा महाथ आदिन समस्त वडङ्क व्यसन वंङ्क दो ग्वलङ्गिनो लिन्दु बिज
ववः ग्वलङ्गिनो राजगाम हलखा घारे वंङ्क ॥ दिपोतस राजा हरसिंह तो शिक ध्वस

15. Later Karnāṭas, p. 22.

16. The edition by Yogi Naraharinath in Himavat Samskriti, 1 (2016 V. S.), p. 19a, is rather incorrect. The "vamsāvalī in possession of Mr. Regmi" mentioned by Prof. Choudhary, Later Karnāṭas, p. 18, seems to be a recent copy of the Gopāla vamsāvalī.

बाय नो मन्नाथ नो उम्व बंधि रंडा कूजन उओडाव हंम्व राजगामया मन्नी भारो धायन
समस्त धन कासन ॥

A translation can only be a tentative one.¹⁷ The first two lines are very obscure, as several expressions are utterly unknown to me.¹⁸

In 446 N. S., Māgha śudi 3 (January 7th, 1326 A. D.) Raja Harasimha of Tirhut.....to the Turks of Delhi.....Simraongarh was broken (stormed). The king of Tirhut, the Mahātha and the rest, all of them fled; some of them ran after them (? : lindumbila), and some went as far as Rajgaon and Dolkha.¹⁹ Afterwards (read : lipotasa) king Harisimha died; and the man called Mājhi Bhāro of Rajgaon, having treacherously arrested and carried off as prisoners both his son and the Mahātha, seized all their wealth,"

This was the sad end of Harisimha. He was no conqueror, no ruler retreating to an outlying portion of his kingdom, but a landless refugee dying in the hills,²⁰ while his family and retainers were seized and plundered by a petty local nobleman. The authority for these events is unimpeachable and the picture it gives fits with all the known facts : the defeat and flight of Harisimha and the unimpeded rule of the Mallas in full independence. After this, the legend of Harisimha's and his descendants' rule in Nepal must disappear from sober history. Only when Nepalese colophons or inscriptions of the 14th century give evidence to the contrary, will it be possible to re-open the question.

If my working hypothesis about Jagatsimha of Tirhut being the son of Harisimha be true, then it means that he retrieved the utterly fallen fortunes of his house by a brilliant marriage, and through that marriage only. Harisimha bequeathed to his descendants neither power nor riches nor influence, but merely a high social standing and nothing else.

As to the Chinese evidence, it is rather curious how Prof. Choudhary²¹ can still accept the old idea of S. Levi that the descendants of Harisimha were recognized as kings of Nepal by the Chinese. Levi did not know of the Itham Bahal inscription of 1382 A. D., which shows clearly

17. Prof. Choudhary's translation is more in the nature of a summary.

18. I express my sincere thanks to the Newar scholar Baikunth Prasad Lacoul, who kindly gave me his advice on this text.

19. To the south-east of the Nepal valley.

20. The tale of his death at Umāgrāma in the Darbhanga district (Later Karnātas, pp. 18-19) seems to be a more local legend.

21. Later Karnātas, p. 19.

enough that Madana Rāma and his son Śaktisīmha (Ma-ta-na Lo-mo and Sha-ti-hsin-ko of the Chinese) descended from Aneka Rāma and thus belonged to a noble Nepalse family.²²

Lastly, I would like to clear the field of two other alleged references to Karnāṭa rule in Nepal. Prof. Choudhary states that "the Patna inscription of 1413 A. D. informs us that the sons of Jayasthitimalla were partners with the Karnāṭas at Bhatgaon".²³ Something is wrong in this reference. The only inscription of 1413 is the one in the compound of Paśupati Nāth.²⁴ It refers only to the sons and grandsons of Jayasthitimalla and gives not the slightest hint about the Karnāṭas.

Another so-called descendant of Harisīmha in Nepal has to be eliminated. Prof. Choudhary has pointed out that "in a four-act Rāmāyaṇa by Dharmagupta we get some description about a king named Yuthasīrphadeva.....From his title, he seems to have belonged to the race of Harisīmha and from his worshipping of Sikharanagram he seems to have dominions in Nepal".²⁵ This has nothing to do with the dynasty of Harisīmha. Śikharanagara or Śikharapurī is the Sanskrit name of Pharping in the Nepal valley; and Yuthasīmha is almost certainly identical with Jaya Yodhasīmha Deva, who along with his brothers appears in a Śikharapurī (Pharping) inscription of 1407 A. D. as a vassal of Jayadharmamalla of Nepal.²⁶ It was apparently a family of local barons.

22. Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 146.

23. Later Karnāṭas, p. 20.

24. First published in Ind. Ant. 1880, pp. 183-184; cf. Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 155.

25. Later Karnāṭas, pp. 22-23.

26. Mediaeval History of Nepal, p. 144.